Your 2011 Philadelphia

Phillies™

BY DANIELLE WILSON

It all started on December 14th, at 12 A.M., Cliff Lee had returned. That's when I, along with many others, realized that 2011 is going to be another winning season for the Philadelphia Phillies. Opening day for the Phillies is on April 1st, and Roy Halladay will be starting that game, most likely against Astros' starter and former Phillie Brett Myers. Charlie Manuel (Manager) and Rich Dubee (Pitching Coach) will most likely decide to alternate the pitchers in the starting rotation based on which arm they throw with (Halladay RHP, Lee LHP, Oswalt RHP, Hamels LHP, Blanton RHP.) That's right, there is a guaranteed sweep of every series we play in, as long as the offense is there to back up the above average pitching. The fifth starter is indeed Joe Blanton, no if's, and's, or but's. There were rumors of him being traded after signing Lee to make room on the salary, but he's staying put for at least one more season. There's one little problem with this dream team, and it's right field. Who will start there everyday? I believe that it will be both 29-year-old Ben Francisco who we acquired along with Cliff Lee back in July of 2009, and rookie Domonic Brown who was the obvious choice as a right field regular, but now The Phillies have more options, including John Mayberry Jr., and Ross Gload. I guess we'll have to see who the break-out star is during spring training!

A little about me, my name is Danielle Wilson, I'm in the 10th grade, and fell in love with the Phillies when I started watching games with my Dad in 2007. I paid close attention to everything about the team, and started writing in July '10. My Twitter account is @CBPhresh, give me a follow!
